

The Lynda Engler Newsletter

November 2016

I hope everyone had a happy Halloween and is enjoying the fall weather.

Work and school have been keeping me very busy lately, but I have also been working on Under the Mountain, the third in the Into the Outside trilogy. While it still doesn't have an ending, it is at least much more fleshed out now, and is starting to resemble a novel rather than a detailed outline.

SEQUEL UPDATE – Into the Yellow Zone

I have sent my manuscript to eight agents and am eagerly awaiting their comments. Wish me luck!

Meanwhile, work continues of the final book in the trilogy. If you would like to become a beta-reader for Under the Mountain, email me at author@lyndaengler.com.

Book Review – Time's Anchor

Well-written with nicely sustained suspense

By Marcha Fox on October 25, 2016

"I usually prefer hard science fiction with plenty of technical details but I really enjoyed this short time travel story. It was well-written, full of suspense, and definitely kept you engaged until you found out how it ended. It was a nice break from my usual reading fare. As with all time travel stories, there is always that underlying message of how what seems like a logical or simple decision at the time can have huge implications and take your life in an entirely different direction. I think everyone would like to go back to a certain point in their life and hit the reset button. This gripping story is another reminder to choose wisely."

Book Recommendation

In Time's Like These, by Nathan Van Coops

After a near-electrocution on a softball field in Florida, Ben Travers and his friends wake up in the 80s. Once they figure out where and when they are, they search for a way home, finding other time travelers along the way, including a few that wind up dead. When Ben meets an enigmatic scientist and his charming, time-traveling daughter, salvation seems at hand, but escaping the dangers of the past may lead to a deadly future. If he hopes to save his friends and get everyone home to the future they remember, Ben must learn to master space and time, and survive a journey where past and future violently collide.

This novel was well-written and engaging. I enjoyed the trip down memory lane to my own life in the 1980s, minus the 'stuck in the past' part of course! Nathan Van Coops is a young author to keep an eye on. I look forward to more of his work!
